

The lower extremity

A fun and interactive course presenting rationales and progressions applicable to the management of MOST of your patients.

INDHOLD:

This seminar presents a logical rationale and progression for you to consistently include the extremities – in this case the lower extremity specifically – in your diagnoses, clinical decision making and management progressions. Knowing why, when, and how makes it easy to confidently include such considerations with all but a few patients in your practice.

Extremities are often thought of as a specialist area and reserved for people either specifically interested in the conditions pertaining to them or in sports and the injuries sustained by athletes.

Although this seminar will give such practitioners more tools, it will also give rationales for all chiropractors in general to include extremity techniques in their practice.

The emphasis will be on treatment techniques and clinical workflows, which can be applied on your first day back in practice. This seminar has a proven track record in changing both clinical rationales and protocols in even the most experienced and well-established clinicians.

MÅL:

This seminar will focus on the following questions:

- Why you should consider treating the lower extremity?
- When does it make sense to do so in your management progression?
- How do you treat the joints of the lower extremity efficiently?
